LANSING

Teenagers today are pressed into kid-gang membership because of environmental causes. Biggest reason is need for security

In this jazzed-up era of ulcers and electronics, the woman can make up her own mind. And, if she can't cope with the pressures in what is still predominantly a man's society, she must face the same pitfalls that her male counterpart does.

Those who don't make the grade are the prostitutes, the narcotics addicts, the party girls, the confidence gals, B-girls and, among the younger set, the juvenile delinquents. In all these classifications the ranks are swelling.

To be pitied most, perhaps, are the teen-aged girls who roam our big-city streets in gangs. Virtually none of these youngsters know better. They are pressed into joining by a complex of environmental reasons. Most of all they become gang members because of an overwhelming desire for security, a yearning to belong.

The vast majority of girl gangs have been spawned in the city slum districts. With few exceptions they are auxiliaries of boy gangs, in which the girls are called "debs" and act as gun molls to the high-school bucks. The debs' duties are diverse — and often frightening.

When inter-neighborhood rivalries boil over into gang wars, the girls generally join in beside their boy friends — doling out ammunition, tending the wounded, loading zip guns. When the clubs hold a social evening — which generally degenerates into a petting party — the debbs tend to other needs of their hoodlum warriors.

Authorities estimate there are more than 1200 kid gangs marauding the nation's streets today. They are steadily increasing in number and viciousness. More than half of them have deb auxiliaries — not a few of which have developed into exclusive sex clubs.

In Anderson, Indiana, recently, 17 - year - old Ronald Dray was fatally injured in a fight climaxing a teen-age sex party in a gravel pit. A remorseful young girl in Massachusetts recently had her life threatened for spilling the beans about a high-school sex cult to which she had belonged.

Organized by her bobby-sox schoolmates, the highly exclusive all-girl club initiated its members by making them "go all the way" with a member of a local male gang. They held weekly meetings which rivaled the Bachanalian revels of ancient Rome.

In New York last year,

Eileen Curry, 17, demonstrates contempt for law as she enters court on grand larceny charge narcotics. The authorities voted her another chance to lead a "clean, honest life."

Why do our young women indulge in these flights from morality? No one can say with certainty. Mrs. Clara Logan, president of the National Association for Better Radio and Television, charges that "crime and violence are dominating factors in 40 percent of all children's programs and have twisted youth's values."

According to Erik H. Erikson, prominent psychologist, "young people read all the easy answers to delinquency with relish and a great sense of superiority." Some distraught parents still blame "the war" — but it's been ten years since V-J Day, and girl gangs are still flourishing.

What becomes of these young girls when they have outgrown tight dungarees and the loud jackets they wear as proud testimony to their defiance of authority? Fortunately, most of them adjust to society and get married or go to work. However, there are still many who can't shake the bad habits they picked up when they were debs.

Police reports indicate that more and more of the wild women they impound are alumni of girl gangs.

pretty Barbara Spencer, 18, told a juvenile court how she had become a drunkard at the age of 13 and then sank rapidly into dope and swindling. She described how she fell in with a wild clique of distaff delinquents who invited her to their uninhibited sex-and-alcohol debaucheries. She finally prostituted herself and worked for a teen-aged boyfriend who supplied her with customers and

Despite long hair and so forth, one in middle is a boy. Trio was arrested by police while hitch-hiking through town in Kentucky

These gals have entered all the old quick-money schemes used by females since the dawn of history. And they've invented new ones, vicious and diabolical.

Within recent months there has been a rash of robberies and homicides committed by women hitch-hikers, particularly in the Southern states.

Most motorists are already aware of the danger in giving a lift to a male hitch-hiker and disregard most roadside riders. But it's generally another proposition when a gal is spotted with her thumb out. Very few men won't slam on the brakes and invite the distressed doll to hop inside.

The motives for this chivalry might be questioned in many cases. After all, a lonely lass can often be cajoled into sharing a drink and possibly a bit of hoop-de-do. The lady-looters are cashing in on this phony chivalry. They are still comparatively rare on American highways, but there are enough of them to constitute a real threat to life, limb and the long green. They have found an effective way to fleece fool-hardy fellows.

On a road between Jackson and Biloxi in Mississippi, last June, 3 drivers were victimized in the same night by one distaff hitch-hiker. Two of her victims were men. The other was a woman, whom she mercilessly gun-whipped after rifling her purse. Each time she drove off with her victim's car, leaving them to get back to civilization as best they could.

Last year, two young girls begged a ride from a Marine sergeant who was on his way home for a two-week leave. After they had driven for an hour or so, one of the chippies pulled a revolver from her pocketbook and ordered him to turn off on a dirt sideroad.

The Marine had no choice. Setting himself for an ordeal, perhaps a fight for his life, the sergeant soon had the surprise of his life.

The girls took turns holding the pistol on their benefactor while they disrobed. Then, standing stark naked, they ordered him at gunpoint to make love to them. With a .38 caliber slug aimed at his head, he did as he was told. When he had finished his chores, the girls gathered up his clothes and left him to fend for himself, minus his car.

When he finally got back to civilization, his only remark to wisecracking reporters was: "It isn't as funny as some people might think. It was pure hell!"

Although the lady who begs a lift might present an inviting situation to most male drivers, it is safer to pass them by

Princess Wladslaw Radziwill, also known as Lois Evans, and Sandra Chryslar (left), both 20, were nabbed in a drug raid

The Marine's misadventure graphically shows to what depths some women have fallen. What kind of girls would be compelled to commit such an outrage? In all likelihood they were under the influence of narcotics.

Current figures released by the Federal Narcotics Bureau indicate that at least one-sixth of the known addicts in the U.S. are female. This shows a tremendous increase in the use of drugs by women in the past dozen years. There is no way of ascertaining the number of dope-users in the country, since the huge majority have never been apprehended.

In a typical city, Detroit, there were 510 arrests of both sexes in 1955. This was more than double the 1954 toll — and 20 times that of 1952! About one-

Left: Chicago police held Peggy Ellsworth, ex-Miss Michigan, for questioning about narcotics addiction

Below: Los Angeles police booked hard-bitten female trio who threw marijuana parties in a trailer camp unless drastic steps are taken by the federal government within the next five years.

Heroin is the favorite narcotic of the habitual user and is being sold in increasing quantities by dope pushers. Adolescent addicts, who can't afford high-priced kicks, must resort to marijuana, which is relatively cheap, and various barbiturates which are being vended over the counter by unscrupulous druggists. Morphine, cocaine and opium are hard to get and fast falling into disuse.

fifth of the addicts nabbed in Detroit were women, and two-thirds of these were between the ages of 18-35.

There has been a marked increase in the use of drugs by high-school and college-age girls since the end of World War II. And since narcotics addicts are prone to commercialize their vice and recruit new victims, there is every reason to expect an upsurge in the use of dope

Marie Lee, hotel clerk in Worcester, Massachusetts, is escorted to station on charge of peddling drugs

The ravages of dope by this time are well-known to every American who reads the papers or goes to the movies — especially since the picture, "The Man With the Golden Arm," was shown in theaters from coast to coast.

Once hooked by the drug habit, any woman is a pawn in the hands of the person from whom she gets her daily dosage. The monkey on her back is heavy and she'll go to any lengths to unload her burden for a few hours with a shot of heroin.

A large proportion of the nation's prostitutes find their only solace through the use of drugs. Often they resorted to flesh-peddling as the only means of paying for their habit. But, as evil as prostitution is, many women have resorted to much baser methods of raising the necessary $30-to-$100 a day for drugs.

Many women have become dope peddlers. Except for murder, perhaps, this is the most heinous crime possible. In New York, Chicago, San Francisco — and other large population centers — law authorities have become alarmed about the number of female narcotics peddlers being nabbed in police dragnets.

Only five years ago it was extremely rare for a woman to ply the illicit drug trade. While male pushers still outnumber the females by a large margin, it is being whittled down year by year.

In California last winter, a police raid was staged in a deserted beach house. A roaring dope party was underway when detectives rushed the scene. Eight people were hauled away in the paddy wagon — six boys between the ages of 15-19, and two middle-aged matrons.

In court the youths testified that the women had lured them indoors and fast-talked them into a sex-and-dope orgy. None of the boys had ever before used narcotics.

A shocking story, true—but one that is becoming ever more common thru-

He meddled in politics and controlled the distribution of Jean Scudder operated house of prostitution in New York until local vice squad cracked down narcotics throughout the entire Western Hemisphere.

His stable of harlots ran the gamut of race, color, creed and price. He white-slaved girls like Jennie the Factory, Big Elsie, Nigger Ruth and Cokey Flo, cutting the ladies in for a slim five percent of their gross — $13 out of every $260 received from their well-heeled clientele.

Luciano's only mistake

was hiring prostitutes that were not enslaved to the narcotics he peddled. The addicts, he knew, would never inform on him for fear of being cut off from their supply. But there was nothing to stop the non-users from running to the police when they got fed up with working for small bucks. And it was the song that some of these girls sang that finally snared Luciano on a compulsory pros-

Lowdown jazz can still be heard in the French Quarter of New Orleans, but the prostitutes have moved across belt. The syndicate doesn't like these going-on because they can result in a complaint to the cops.

Bare flesh and lowdown music have always been the big attractions for thrill-seeking tourists in New Orleans. Every night an army of eager sight-seers invades the fabled French Quarter — birthplace of the blues and big-time prostitution in America.

They meander along old

Bourbon Street, which still echoes to the mournful keening of jazz. They stroll through narrow alleys, walled in by brassy nightspots, festooned with peeling stucco and poster-pictures of peeling ladies. Overhead, Spanish balconies stand in mute testimony to the earthy past when scarlet queens stood behind the lacy ironwork and teasingly displayed their wares to passersby.

music in the smokey cellar clubs, but all the hot women have migrated across Canal Street to the "respectable" side of town. And virtually all of them are paying through the nose for syndicate protection against the reform party that shuttered the plush bordellos which once thrived in the Quarter. Second rate burlesque babes and thirsty B-girls are sad substitutes for the naughty mademoiselles who used to reign here.

Prostitution has deserted its old haunts in New Orleans, but it is still a tradition. The girls have lost their French accents; in fact they sound more like Brooklynites than southern belles. But any taxi driver can supply the

New York's garment center employs hundreds of part-time models who go to any lengths to sell more goods to out-of-town male buyers plotted to swing million dollar deals. And many of the best prostitutes have left the oldest profession in the world to help oil the wheels of commerce.

How? The answer is obvious. These dazzling dolls, operating under the guise of secretaries and file clerks, have been tutored in the technique of taking the snag out of a business deal. They know nothing about legitimate business, but they certainly know the frailties of male businessmen.

The girls who play this souped-up role of women in industry are ready at a moment's notice to take off for Timbuctoo or Walla-Walla. Mother nature bequeathed them all the necessary equipment. In the garment industry, these gals are called "clinkers" and when a transaction hits a snag they are called to come a-running.

A recent hint of the situation was brought to light publicly when Sam Chapman, manufacturer of exclusive dresses in New York City, was tagged for allegedly using girls to promote whole-

Department store buyers expect female companionship nowadays when they visit New York with a large order in their pockets

Describing a run-of-the-mill assingment, she told of a dragged-out affair with a buyer who was exceptionally hard to sell.

"I was posing as a file clerk," she said, "when my employer introduced me to this department store buyer from Indianapolis. Then I went into my act and made a play for the guy. We had dinner that night and for the next six nights. And breakfast, too.

"Naturally I never let on that I was trying to sell him a large order of dresses, but he bought more

Las Vegas gambling dens have cashed in on a brand new kind of sucker game from my company that week than his store will ever be able to unload, and I got a nice fat bonus."

When you consider that more than 8000 clothing buyers in New York alone during the season — and add to this all other kinds manufacturing towns — you will get some idea of the scope of this type of sales promotion in the nation today. Selling with raw sex is burgeoning forth as standard operating procedure in American business.

But if a wayward girl wants to make a quick buck there are myriad opportunities.

A new scheme, for example, was recently hat-

Blondie is really working for the house, not the guy at her side. She receives percentage ched in Las Vegas. It's a foregone conclusion that when a guy decides to head for this neon-lit oasis in the Nevada desert he must be prepared to part with a hefty hunk of his bankroll. Whatever money he has left after paying for room and board in Vegas' plush hostelrys will probably be claimed by the local gambling tables.

Roulette and crap are still the most two popular sucker games. The wheels turn and the dice rattle from noon to the wee hours of the morning in more than a hundred gambling lairs.

Fact is, however, that the nightly take is dwindling and the much-ballyhooed Las Vegas boom is beginning to fizzle.

Never daunted, though, the gambling concessionaires have landed on a new gimmick for digging deeped into the patrons' pockets. Employing the oldest come-on in history — comely women — the ruse is a direct steal from that used in saloons.

Any guy who's been around knows enough to steer clear of the B-girl, the barside chippie whose job it is to pull out of unwary customers. Stealing a march on the B-girls, the fast-dealing femmes in Vegas are expert at enticing the chumps to lay more cash on the line at the gambling tables.

They might be called G-girls. (The G for Gambling).

Here's how they operate: First, they permit themselves to be picked up by a likely looking gent. Then they pilot him over to the betting table. Most men, it seems, like to impress a lovely lady with their spending ability. Some gullible guys will even give the dame a few bucks to gamble herself.

By the time he comes to his senses, the sucker's pockets are empty — unless, of course, he has a phenomenal run of luck and beats the tremendous odds against him.

In order to encourage the victim to gamble for higher stakes, the G-girl uses every trick at her command. As a final touch she will often hint that she is available for some bedroom capers if the guy comes out on top of the game. This naturally makes the sucker over-eager to win a stack of blue chips — and increase his bets beyond his financial capabilities.

Playing both ends against the middle, the ambitious G-girl can still realize a profit for the night even if the foolish fellow does win at the table. All she has to do is sell her favors for a handsome price — usually equal to the amount that he has won.

When the hayseed loses, which is almost always, the G-girl receives a percentage of the house's haul. A good-looking doll who knows how to handle herself in the clinches can make as much as $500 a week.

One Las Vegas visitor, after being fleeced out of $8500 in a single night by a G-girl, issues this warning: "You can't trust any woman in Vegas except your wife."

This might be said of easy-to-pick-up women anywhere in the world. If additional proof is needed consider another racket which is cropping up in Saloon in downtown St. Louis abounds with B-girls whose job it is to entice male tipplers to buy twice as many whiskies urban and rural communities. A by product of the electronic age, this swindle is a switch on the now commonplace blackmail game that relies on the telephone tap.

An elderly automobile dealer was recently victimized in an out-of-the-way roadhouse in South Carolina. He was on his way home after a hot day's work last July and decided to stop for a beer. A young blonde struck a conversation at the bar. She invited him to join her at a booth for a few private words. Before long they left together for a nearby motel.

It was the first time since his marriage that he had been indiscreet. His conscience gnawed at him for the next week. The bad memory was beginning to fade mercifully when two dapperly dressed men entered his showroom.

They insisted they must see him alone — about a deal. They looked like lawyers and carried briefcases. When the office door closed behind them, one of the men spoke up.

"It's about your date with Shirley," he said. "You know, the girl you propositioned in the bar. We have the case all tied up and it's up to you to get out of the knot."

Fear struck at the elderly man's heart. "It'll cost you $2000," the visitor went on. For evidence the two men produced a tape recording of the intimate conversation that took place in the booth. Afraid that his wife would hear the recording, as threatened by the blackmailers, the dealer desperately handed over the $2000 and gratefully accepted the tape. He had joined the ranks of thousands of men who have been mulcted by this new brand of blackmail.

The system operates with fiendish efficiency.

for obvious reasons, a greedy barkeep is likely to work in cahoots with the con artists.

It may be a sign of the times that the old trick of the Mickey Finn has been replaced with electronic gadgets. But it also also a sign of the times that there are women masterminding some of these up-to-date extortion gangs.

The gentle sex no longer lives up to its billing. Women have moved out of the kitchen into a world that was molded by men and for men. And just like men, many females are floored by the hard knocks they must accept in a competitive society.

The vast majority of American women have proven equal to the task they have chosen for themselves. They are a credit to the nation. In their ranks are outstanding personalities in virtually every field of human endeavor. But, they are only human — and the weaker individuals are forced down the path of least resistance.

They take what seems to be the easy way out of their dilemma — only to find out too late that decency and courage pay off much better than prostitution, narcotics and crime.
